DEMOCRATS MAY REFUSE TO VOTE ON FBI PICK

1 The top Democrat in the U.S. Senate said on Sunday that Democrats would consider refusing to vote on a new FBI director until a special prosecutor is named to investigate President Donald Trump's potential ties to Russia. Senate Democratic Leader Chuck Schumer said his caucus has not yet made a decision on whether to withhold their votes, but added that the issue is being looked at as a way to ensure there is a thorough investigation of alleged Russian meddling in the 2016 U.S. election. "To have that special prosecutor, people would breathe a sigh of relief because then there would be a real independent person overlooking the FBI director," Schumer told CNN's "State of the Union" program. REUTERS

N. KOREA MISSILE LANDS IN SEA NEAR RUSSIA

2 North Korea, defying calls to rein in its weapons program, fired a ballistic missile that landed in the sea near Russia on Sunday, days after a new leader came to power in South Korea pledging to engage Pyongyang in dialogue. The U.S. military's Pacific Command said it was assessing the type of missile that was fired but it was "not consistent with an intercontinental ballistic missile". The U.S. threat assessment has not changed from a national security standpoint, a U.S. official said. Japanese Defense Minister Tomomi Inada said the missile could be a new type. It flew for 30 minutes before dropping into the sea between North Korea's east coast and Japan. A U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the missile landed 60 miles south of Russia's Vladivostok region. REUTERS

MACRON INAUGURATED AS FRENCH PRESIDENT

3 Emmanuel Macron took power as president of France on Sunday, vowing to restore the country's status in Europe and the world and heal divisions in society — a nod to the bitter campaign the pro-EU centrist fought to defeat a far-right leader. The 39-year-old former investment banker, unknown to the wider public three years ago and whose May 7 election marked a meteoric rise to power, was inaugurated leader of the world's fifth-largest economy in a solemn Elysee Palace ceremony. In his first words after taking office, he pledged to restore France's standing on the world stage, strengthen national self-confidence and heal divisions that the bitterly-fought campaign had opened up. US SETTLES RUSSIAN MONEY LAUNDERING CASE

5 A Russian-owned group of companies has agreed to pay nearly $6 million to settle U.S. civil allegations that the firms laundered proceeds of a $230 million tax fraud, ending a politically charged case days before it was set to go to trial. Federal prosecutors in New York announced late Friday the surprise settlement between the U.S. government and Russian businessman Denis Katsyv, the owner of Prevezon Holdings, as both sides were preparing to bring the three-year case to trial next week. "We will not allow the U.S. financial system to be used to launder the proceeds of crimes committed anywhere – here in the U.S., in Russia, or anywhere else," Acting Manhattan U.S. Attorney Joon H. Kim said. The settlement brings an end to a case that raised many of the elements of distrust between Moscow and Washington. REUTERS

WHEN DONALD SAYS, 'YOU'RE HIRED!'

OPINION

ELLIS HENICAN
@henican

"Who Wants to Be FBI Director?"

On TV's newest reality show, host Donald Trump has divided the contestants into two teams and has begun parading them in for interviews.

Experienced law enforcement officials who could actually do the job: Interim FBI Director Andrew McCabe, ex-NYPD Commissioner Ray Kelly, ex-Justice Department official Alice Fisher and former U.S. Attorney (and current NY Appeals Judge) Michael Garcia.

Partisan republicans whose chief qualification would be loyalty to Donald Trump: Texas Sen. John Cornyn, ex-congressman Mike Rogers, ex-congressman Trey Gowdy and federal Judge Henry Hudson, who most famously struck down the centerpiece of Obamacare.

I have a pretty good idea which team the president is looking more closely at. But when it comes to hiring and firing FBI directors, I have learned that presidents can sometimes fool even the savviest reporter, just like Lyndon Johnson did.

You know this story? Back in 1964, no reporter was better sourced in Washington than Newsweek's Ben Bradlee — and Bradlee was about to shake the town again. He had it on excellent authority, directly from White House press secretary Bill Moyers, that President Johnson was going to replace J. Edgar Hoover as director of the FBI.

This was huge news. Hoover, a towering figure in Washington, was equally admired, loathed and feared.

Just as expected, Johnson called a news conference. Cameramen came from the three TV networks. So did a big mob of print reporters with their notepads and pens. But the news the president delivered shocked everyone. Instead of dumping Hoover, President Johnson named him director "for life."

Johnson then turned to Moyers and said: "You can tell Ben Bradlee to go f— himself."

This was the president's decision, and he was going to make it.

It turned out to be a terrible decision. Hoover, bloated with power and feeling invincible, took the FBI into all kinds of places it didn't belong: spying on political enemies, undermining civil rights, disregarding constitutional rights.

Years later, Johnson explained it this way: "It's probably better to have him inside the tent pissing out, than outside the tent pissing in."

That made a certain amount of sense. But when Johnson said it, even he seemed to have some regret in his voice.

Athletic immortality may be able to be achieved with cell therapy procedures

Aging baby boomers may be able to regain functionality with similar treatments.

MATT BURKE
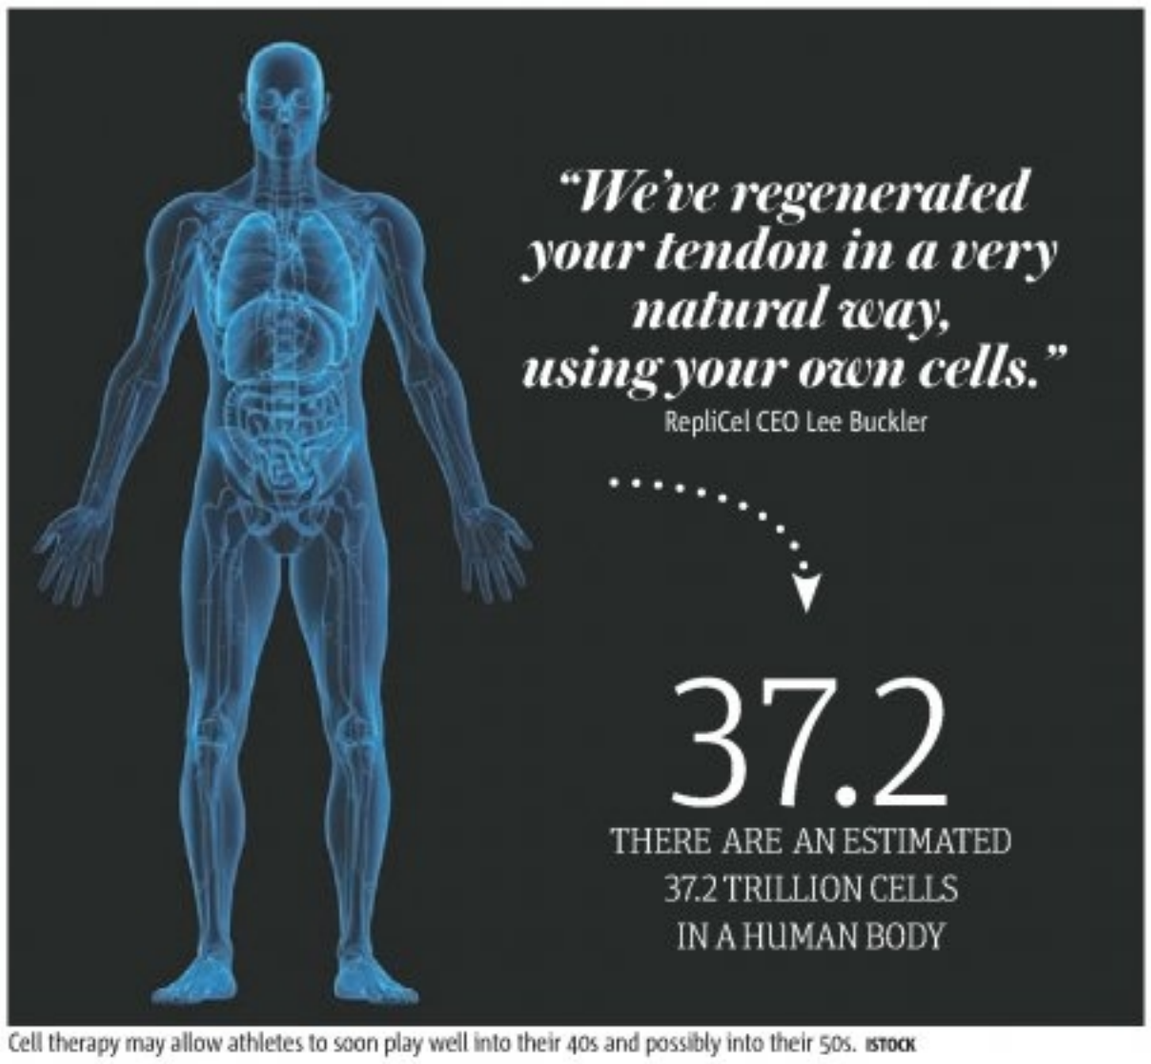
matthew.burke@metro.us



"We've regenerated your tendon in a very natural way, using your own cells."
RepliCel CEO Lee Buckler
THERE ARE AN ESTIMATED
37.2 TRILLION CELLS
IN A HUMAN BODY

Cell therapy may allow athletes to soon play well into their 40s and possibly into their 50s. ISTOCK

Kobe Bryant traveled to Germany one off-season several years back to have PRP (platelet rich plasma) therapy. The season after his first injection, he led the league in scoring for much of the year. Peyton Manning reportedly went to Europe in 2011, had stem cell therapy and broke every passing record in the NFL book shortly thereafter. Both athletes were well into their 30s when they had these cutting edge and often taboo treatments done.

In most every other walk of life, your mid-30s is supposed to be your prime. In professional athletics, 30 is considered old, and 35 is considered ancient.

That perception, however, could change radically in the next few years.

Lee Buckler is the CEO of RepliCel, a company in Vancouver, Canada, that is making extraordinary strides in researching cell regeneration for damaged tendons and is providing innovative treatment that promotes the healing process. When asked if he thinks that pro athletes will be able to play into their 40s and possibly even 50s in 25 years or so thanks to modern medicine — specifically cell therapy — Buckler was firm that it would not take nearly that long.

"In the next five to 10 years we're going to see it," Buckler told Metro. "As a field of regenerative medicine, in the next five to 10 years, we're going to be able to see not only the high performance athletes, but the weekend warriors and aging baby boomers be able to regain the functionality in their beaten down ligaments and tendons."

Complete restoration

What RepliCel and other regenerative medicine companies are doing is completely restoring tissue using a person's own cells.

"We take the patient's own cells from a tissue biopsy that we take from the back of their scalp," Buckler said. "There are cells in there that are highly expressive of the kinds of proteins that build tissue. We then grow millions more of those cells in the lab. And then we put them in a vile and send them back to the doctor for re-injection."

Surgery to repair broken down knees and elbows is basically a "quick fix," Buckler says, and it's just now that we're getting to a point where full restoration is possible.

"We haven't just numbed the pain [with cell therapy]" Buckler said. "We haven't just carved away chips in your joint or anything like that. What we've seen from the studies we've done so far is we've regenerated your tendon in a very natural way using your own cells. How long that lasts depends on how well we've rebuilt your tendon and how much abuse you are going to subject your tendon to in the future. One thing that we believe with certainty is that it's going to be a lot more doable than any other approach that's simply trying to address the symptoms or increase your function, without truly regenerating your tendon."

What's next?

RepliCel has partnerships across the globe and is working on some "emerging relationships" in the United States, which Buckler says will soon lead to a pre-IND (investigational new drug) meeting with the FDA. He anticipates great activity in the U.S. soon.

Cell therapy is already commonplace in the NFL as Sports Illustrated reported in 2014 that stem cell treatments were already being used by hundreds of players (an average of six players per team). But the treatments are still largely frowned upon by the mainstream U.S. sports leagues. From the SI piece:

"Stem cells are still somewhat in the shadows — evidence of their usefulness in treating athletes' injuries is so far largely anecdotal, NFL teams often will not pick up the bill for players, and the overseas market for treatments not approved in the U.S. makes the whole field seem somewhat taboo."

Pippa Middleton has no chill whatsoever

GETTY IMAGES

I told you this woman was torturing herself.

Middleton is set to marry James Matthews next weekend. And sure, she's the one saying "I do," but all the attention will probably be on her brother-in-law, Prince Harry, and his American sweetheart, Meghan Markle. Last week, news broke that Markle would be attending the full wedding as The Hot Ginger Prince's date.

Originally, there were rumors that Markle wouldn't be invited to Pippa's wedding ceremony at all. But Middleton gave in and made an exception for Markle because, I mean, what else was she going to do? Deal with the wrath of Buckingham Palace?

Methinks not.

Pippa Middleton is a very prepared woman. And when it comes to her wedding next week, well — she's not messing around, OK?

The younger Middleton sister is reportedly training with a Bridal Body Bootcamp, which is an alliterative tongue twister that just happens to sound like actual torture. The 33-year-old has enlisted a slew of experts to help her get ready for her big day.

"Pippa has met with her personal trainer about five times a week and mostly sticks to cardio and pilates," a source tells E! News. "Her diet is the healthiest ever — she hasn't even had a glass of wine in months."

Paris Jackson loves gettin' naked

INSTAGRAM/PARIS JACKSON

Paris-Michael Katherine Jackson — a 19-year-old whose sudden rise to stardom is frankly suspicious — really enjoys being in the nude. To prove it, she posted a nudie to Instagram, a sext heard 'round the world.

Lest you think this was just a simple ploy for attention, the only daughter of the late Michael Jackson wrote an entire essay underneath the image. Her thesis appears to simply be that being nude is like, a beautiful thing or whatever. A novel concept, don't you think?

"i'll say it again for those questioning what i stand for and how i express myself," she wrote. "nudity started as a movement for 'going back to nature,' 'expressing freedom,' 'being healthier' and was even called a philosophy. being naked is part of what makes us human."

Even though I'm not sure where this essay came from — she's not even nude, she's literally just showing off some side boob — I suppose it's good that Jackson is using her newfound platform for good. The girl has been in the actual spotlight for all of five months and she's already preaching to her 1.4 million followers about accepting yourself and being healthy while smoking a cancer stick topless.

North West would like to be left alone, please

GETTY IMAGES

North West — a 3-year-old with more common sense than most of Hollywood — has a message for the paparazzi.

The daughter of Kanye West and Kim Kardashian was spotted yelling at the paparazzi over the weekend when they rushed her and mother Kim after an ice cream run. "No pictures!" she yelled. "No. Pictures." I mean, she was a few seconds away from bum rushing one paparazzo — probably the one who offered a lame "Sorry, North" while continuing to take pics of the young fashionista.

Let the girl enjoy her ice cream in peace, y'all. Would you want someone disturbing the tender, special moment between you and your mint chocolate chip? I didn't think so.

As The Cut points outs, the paparazzi can be pretty ruthless when it comes to taking photographs of celebrities and their children. However, judging from Kim's reaction to North's outburst — a giggle and a "come on sweetie," I doubt that the 36-year-old will be complaining about the attention any time soon.

Abby Lee Miller is really milking this prison thing

To the surprise of approximately nobody, Abby Lee Miller is trying to get as much attention over her recent prison sentence as possible.

"Dance Moms'" most shameless provocateur went on E! News over the weekend to shed a tear for the cameras, because the woman has got to make the most of her time in the spotlight.

GETTY IMAGES

"It is surreal. How does a nice Catholic girl end up going to prison for a year? It's crazy," the 50-year-old says, somehow keeping a straight face.

"I've made mistakes. I have to pay for those mistakes. I feel like the whole case could have been handled differently."

Yeah! You could have like, not hid your money from the government.

Miller has about a month and a half before she has to head to the clink, where she will reenact the role of the very delusional Roxie Hart from "Chicago," a role iconically played by Renee Zellweger. There will be singing and dancing and seedy well-dressed lawyers played by Richard Gere.

Talking 'King Arthur' and willies with Guy Ritchie

The famed director is as fun to talk to as his movies are to watch.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Charlie Hunnam plays the ripped future monarch in Guy Ritchie's "King Arthur: Legend of the Sword," now in theaters. WARNER BROS. PICTURES

Guy Ritchie is not your typical director. He's no quiet, brooding artiste who muses about his craft. His movies feel like him: They have his energy and his very English sense of humor. When he graduated from dirty, fast-paced crime comedies, like "Lock, Stock and Two Smoking Barrels" and "Snatch," to the big-budget franchise-starter that was 2009's "Sherlock Holmes," there was a worry that his voice would be consumed by corporate product. But it wasn't. The same goes for his new "King Arthur: Legend of the Sword," with a ripped Charlie Hunnam as Ritchie's twist on the Once and Future King.

GETTY IMAGES

I was slightly surprised that "King Arthur" felt like one of your films. Usually fantasy movies feel very proper, staid. This one felt like you.
Right. I hope so. I like director-driven movies. I respond to a director who says, "Right, this is what we're doing." They grab you by the scruff of your neck and you go, "Oh, thanks!" I want to be told what to think as opposed to one of those committee movies, you know?

Where the studio heads think they're directors, too.
It's a bunch of producers sitting around, saying, "Well, I think it should be this, the computer says no, the computer says yes." Forget all that, mate. It's an art, not a science.

I was perhaps most delighted that you slipped in funny nicknames, as though you were still making "Lock, Stock" and "Snatch." Goosefat [played by Aiden Gillen] is a good one.
Goosefat's a fun name, isn't it? Actually, I should give credit where credit is due. Lionel [Wigram], the producer, came up with it. It's not particularly his world, coming up with nicknames. But he came up with Goosefat. It was for another reason he was called Goosefat, which was rather rude. So we turned it into Goosefat because he was good at slipping out between bars.

In which things take a dirty turn

Do you have a favorite old King Arthur movie? Other than "Monty Python and the Holy Grail," obviously.
The truth is, I haven't seen many of the others. Other than "Monty Python," what else is there? There was "First Knight," but I didn't see that either. The only big one I can think of is [John] Boorman's one ["Excalibur," from 1981].

That's a great movie, but also not quite a straight-forward Arthur movie. It's really weird, in an amazing way.
Pretty weird. But f—ing genius moments in it, by the way. Its weirdness is where the gold really lies. When [Uther] Pendragon rides in on the dragon's breath, I was in there, brother. And then the son with the gold mask? It was good imagery — big, bold stuff. You had the Irishman with the big willy. What's his name?

I have no idea. Pierce Brosnan? Wait, he's not in it.
No. Does he have a big willy? No, it's what's-his-name. He's the big Irish guy. [Thinks] Liam Neeson.

Right! Does he have a big willy?
That's what everyone says.

The Lyric is putting a modern spin on the classic tale. ALL PHOTOS PROVIDED

For weeks, Maritza Bostic has been Guinevere, the femme fatale of Arthurian legend. The Reading native lives in Harlem, but is staying with her father in Dorchester as she rehearses ahead of her performance in the Lyric Stage's production of "Camelot," which opens Friday.

This modern adaptation of the classic musical centers around the love triangle between the Celtic queen, her husband, King Arthur, and her lover, Sir Lancelot, Arthur's trusted knight.

Bostic is the first known African-American cast as Guinevere, a role usually associated with the likes of Julie Andrews, who owned the part in the 1960 Broadway production. For Bostic, stepping into these medieval shoes is both daunting and exciting.

"It is intimidating, but also freeing," says the 24-year-old actress. "I can take this iconic role and explore who my Guinevere is."

"Camelot" is ultimately a tragedy, as love and lust destroys the Round Table and its high social ideals of the strong and rich protecting the weak and poor. Bostic believes this new version allows for modern interpretations of the three central players.

"The main roles are cast a little younger than usual," she says. "There is a sense of young people exploring who they are within this love triangle."

Performing in a Lyric Stage production is like coming home for Bostic. The company is where she broke ground in the role of Red Riding Hood in Sondheim's "Into the Woods." It is also where she took her first steps at being a professional performer by enrolling in the Lyric Stage First summer program.

Maritza Bostic is ready to play Guinevere.

"The long days and hard work just made me love it more, and I decided I wanted to do it all the time," she says.

Outside the Lyric Stage, Bostic's recent appearances include roles in "Rent" and "Hairspray," as well as a background performance in the crime drama "Detroit" by Oscar-winning director Kathryn Bigelow, which hits theaters this summer.

Though she is busy with "Camelot," she may find some time to catch Guy Ritchie's latest flick, "King Arthur: The Legend of the Sword."

"I am curious to see what he has done," Bostic says. "The more I work on this show, the more I want to read all the stories."

Ben Folds is ready to jam with the Boston Pops

The acclaimed singer-songwriter returns to Symphony Hall this week.

MATT JUUL
letters@metro.us

Ben Folds isn't pulling any punches with his latest trip to Boston. PROVIDED

Ben Folds has always had an eclectic taste in music, which is why he spent a good part of his youth rocking out to everything from classic R&B tunes to the Boston Pops. The 50-year-old musician will once again bring his distinct style to the famed orchestra for a pair of shows May 17 and 18. Ahead of the shows, Folds opens up about his love for the Pops, his new job with the National Symphony Orchestra and how fans can help save the future of the arts.

Since this is your third go-around with the Pops—you must have a special place in your heart for the orchestra.

When I was a kid, I had all these 78 rpm records that I got at a yard sale. There were all these Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops records. I loved those as a kid. So it means a lot to me. What can be said? They're the real thing, and it's always an honor.

What was it about those records that spoke to you?

I would listen to whatever I could get my hands on as a kid. I would play Little Richard and be like, "This is the best s—t I've ever heard." A couple minutes later I put on Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops, and was like, "This is awesome!" It was just fun. I think making the symphony orchestra fun while retaining the dignity of the institution was just a great idea.

You're bringing your "Concerto for Piano and Orchestra" to Boston for the first time. Any other big plans in store for this trip?

[The concerto] earned me my first and only No. 1 record of any description. We had the No. 1 classical record with that for months. As a result, I've gotten to play this all over the place. Oddly enough, Boston, which was one of the first places that I played with an orchestra, I still haven't done that yet. So I'm really excited to play it there. And we're bringing some new charts too. I don't like to keep repeating myself.

The National Symphony Orchestra just named you as its first artistic adviser. Are you excited for the new gig?

Every time I've done anything at the Kennedy Center, I've probably been so enthusiastic that I put my all into it. They brought me on board, that way I can curate, like, dream concerts and come up with programs and music. It's amazing. It's like the best facility to come home to and try new things and bring my rowdy friends into it.

Do you have any advice for how fans can help protect the fine arts from the backlash it's getting in the political sphere?

We have so many things to support right now. There's so many things to protect in this environment, but if you only put one quote of mine in the entire piece on me, I would say call your representatives about the National Endowment for the Arts if you at all are concerned. You have about a week. Even though the budget's going to drag on a lot longer, that's probably how much time they'll have where lobbying can still make a difference. So I say f—ing do it!

What to consider before applying to graduate school

Before anything else, students should be considering their professional end goal. ISTOCK jobs & education

Jumping in right after college may not be the best move for you.

SARA FEINSTEIN
@SaraBFeinstein
sara.feinstein@metro.us

After spending so much of our lives on a conveyer belt of schooling, jumping right into graduate studies after finishing college often seems like the next logical step.

But for many students, that's not always the smartest move, says Linda Abraham, founder and president of admissions consulting company, Accepted.com.

Abraham walked us through what students should consider before making the decision to pursue a graduate degree.

What's your end goal?
Unless you're wealthy enough to be studying medieval Chinese poetry just for the heck of it, the primary consideration when applying to graduate school should be where you want to end up, says Abraham. "Maybe you want to become a researcher, or get an MBA to go into consulting, or you want to teach history in high school," she explains. "Either way, you should always have a professional end in mind."

And the statement-of-purpose essay — one of the many requirements of the application process — is a great way to discover whether or not you have a legitimate postgraduation goal. If you can't sit down and write that out without some sense of clarity, it's probably worth reconsidering, says Abraham.

1. What specifics does the school offer?
Students should be thorough when considering all that a school has to offer, says Abraham. If you're hoping to pursue a master's in history to become a community college professor, that means outlining exactly which aspects of that school's history program appeal to you, explains the admissions consultant.

"Is there some professor doing really interesting work about an era that you're specifically interested in? Is there some teaching component in addition to the history master's that's going to help you be a better teacher, or some combination that gives you the ability to take classes in education department of the university?" she continues. Overall, "it's important to have a specific goal, and be able to articulate your purpose in applying to that program," she says.

2. Have you tested this career path?
Before deciding on a graduate degree, prospective students should have tested out the field in some way, says Abraham. Getting a good feel "requires taking jobs or internships before starting graduate study that allow you to experience the atmosphere, at least, if not the actual work you would end up doing," she says.

Sure, some people might be extremely directed and guided from the very start, "but even those applicants should at least spend summers doing work that's related to what they think is their lifelong vision or career that they want to pursue," Abraham says.

3. Is this financially responsible?
Running through a cost-benefit analysis is crucial when considering whether or not to pursue a graduate degree. "[Students] are going to invest x amount of years, forgo so much income, and pay however much in out of pocket tuition expenses," she says, so the question becomes, "Will they get a job afterwards that's going to pay back that debt?

"If the likelihood is yes, then fine, but if the likelihood is no, they have to ask themselves, 'Will I derive enough satisfaction from these studies and from whatever position I'm going to be in later, that I'm willing to spend the money and the time anyway?' "

JOBS OF THE FUTURE

Anesthesiologists make some of the highest salaries

LEARN ABOUT THE TOP CAREERS OF 2017

And that's only one perk of the job.

SARA FEINSTEIN
@MetroNewYork
letters@metro.us

Anesthesiologists are responsible for monitoring a patient's safety and well being before and after surgery. ISTOCK

Anesthesiologists are known for their stressful job — one that involves administering just the right amount of anesthesia to properly sedate a patient. But their ability to relieve pain quickly and efficiently gives them a satisfaction that makes the high pressure worth it, says Dr. Lawrence Epstein, professor of anesthesiology at Mount Sinai School of Medicine. (There's also that six-figure salary).

We spoke with Epstein to find out more about this in-demand profession.

What does an anesthesiologist do?

"An anesthesiologist is a physician whose job is to protect patients from the dangers and pain associated with surgery, childbirth or other procedures," says Epstein.

They're typically working in an operating room, where their role is not only to put patients to sleep and wake them up, but closely monitor their vital signs throughout the entire procedure.

What schooling do you need?

The journey to becoming an anesthesiologist is a long one.

"You have to have a bachelor's degree first, then go to medical school, and after medical school, you have to do a residency, which is a minimum of four years," he explains, "so that's basically 12 years after high school."

And it doesn't end there. Those who want to specialize in areas such as cardiovascular, obstetric, or pediatric anesthesia need to complete an additional one to two years of training.

What's the typical salary?

The median annual salary for anesthesiologists was $269,600 in May 2016, according to Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Is it hard to find employment?

"No," says Epstein. "There's a demand for well-trained anesthesiologists and that demand doesn't seem to be going away."

In fact, the Bureau of Labor Statistics projects a 21 percent employment growth through 2024, during which an estimated 7,100 jobs will open up.

The pros

One of the best parts of the job is the intellectual stimulation.

"Unlike a lot of fields of medicine, which are slow — in other words you give somebody a medication and tell them to come back in a month to see how they're doing— anesthesiology is really a moment to moment specialty," Epstein says.

"You're doing things that affect patients very critically and very quickly, and there's a lot of responsibility," he continues.

But that's part of what makes it so gratifying."When you can take a woman that's in labor and make it a pleasant pain free experience — that's really a wonderful feeling."

The cons

The biggest drawback of the profession reflects the major issue with the field of medicine as a whole. "It's always a battle between what the politicians want to do and what physicians want to do," he says.

Isaiah Thomas, Amir Johnson and the Celtics will play in a do-or-die Game 7 against the Wizards tonight at TD Garden. GETTY IMAGES

3 Things to watch for in Game 7

The Celtics and Wizards will lay it all on the line at the Garden tonight.

MATT BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

The Celtics have played in a whopping 29 Game 7's in their storied history and have won 21 of them. In their current series against the Wizards, the home team has won every game so far.

Both of those nuggets would lead you to believe that the Celtics are a lock to win Monday night at the Garden and advance to the Eastern Conference Finals.

Not so fast.

In 2009, many jumped to the conclusion that an Eastern Conference Finals trip was a sure thing when the Orlando Magic came to town for a semifinals Game 7 against the C's. Hedo Turkoglu and Dwight Howard had different plans as the Magic outscored the Celtics 35-21 in the fourth quarter of that one, en route to a 101-82 victory and a date with LeBron's Cavs in the ECF.

It should be noted that the Celtics did not have Kevin Garnett that entire series due to injury, but nonetheless the Celtics were heavy favorites going into the do-or-die contest.

As for the here and now, here are three things to keep close tabs on.

1 Wall ball

The Celtics did a terrific job on John Wall at the start of Friday night's Game 6 in Washington, holding him to 1-of-12 shooting early on. Wall would eventually rebound, as would his Wizards, as he scored 26 points on 9-of-25 shooting — and hit a killer of a 3-pointer with 3.5 seconds left — in a 92-91 Washington victory.

The Celtics will need to have a first half of Game 6 kind of effort on Wall Monday night as Washington will surely want to get the ball into the hands of its best player in a do-or-die Game 7.

For the series, Wall is averaging 26.3 points per game.

2 Win ugly

Given the home cooking in the series thus far, one could make the case that the Celtics played their best basketball of the series this past Friday night in D.C. It was an inspired effort, and if the game had been held at the Garden, no doubt the Cavaliers would be in town right now instead of the Wizards.

One interesting note is that the Celtics have been on fire in their own building offensively in this series. In Game 1 they put up 123 points, in Game 2 they put up 129 points and last Wednesday, in Game 5, they put up 123 points.

That said, Game 7's tend to be sloppy and ugly — with both teams going balls to the wall on defense (think of the 2010 Lakers-Celtics Game 7 in L.A.). The Celtics may have to win this one without breaking 100 points.

Isaiah Thomas
GETTY IMAGES

3 Fix the bench

Nearly all of the offensive credit for the Celtics' strong Game 6 play, despite the loss, goes to their starters. Isaiah Thomas scored 27, Avery Bradley scored 27, Al Horford had 20 and Jae Crowder had 10. The Celtics' bench though was mostly invisible on Friday night as it scored a grand total of five points. Jaylen Brown and Terry Rozier both played 11 minutes but did not score and Marcus Smart played a whopping 28 minutes and scored just one point on 0-3 shooting.

In all of the Celtics' victories in this series, they've had at least one player off the bench score nine points or more. They'll need that offensive boost in Game 7.

Aries Don't let problems at work overflow into your personal life. If you let your loved ones act as your safety net, you'll rise above any unscrupulous situation you encounter.

Taurus Keep an open mind, but don't let anyone pressure or manipulate you into something you don't want to do. Be the master of your destiny.

Gemini Take care of unfinished business before you start something new. Punctuality will play a role in how others perceive you. Do what you say and say what you do.

Cancer Do what feels right. Making changes to suit someone else is not going to work out well. It's OK to be different and to follow your instincts.

Leo It's up to you to bring about changes that will make your life better. An opportunity that allows you to use your skills distinctively should be considered.

Virgo You'll be offered lots of information — some good, some not so good. Take the time to decipher the best way to use what you've been given to accomplish your goal.

Libra Emotions will surface and take control. Problems at home can be expected. Stay calm and keep the peace, but don't lose sight of what's best for you.

Scorpio Look for alternative solutions to get what you want. Using emotional tactics and making inspiring suggestions will raise interest in what you want to do.

Sagittarius A change of plans shouldn't throw you off your game. Embrace whatever challenge comes your way in order to prove your competence to others.

Capricorn Control your emotions. Your energy will be better spent doing things that will bring you happiness, not discord. Live within your means and without envy.

Aquarius Financial gains look promising. Cutting a deal or signing a contract will boost your income. Investing in something you do well will up your game.

Pisces You must be honest about who you are, what you want and how you feel if you want to avoid being interrogated by someone assessing your ability. EUGENIA LAST
